Exploring Activity as a Methodological Option

The meaning of activity was elucidated from the standpoint of educational philosophy. Different perspectives as expounded by thinkers such as John Dewey, Mahatama Gandhi, RN Tagore, Maria Montessori and Paulo Freire on the concept of Activity were discussed in the context of present education system. Many presenters shared various relevant examples and few case studies to highlight the possibilities of using activity as a pedagogical option in the current scenario. The presentations were followed by an interaction between the paper presenters, the students in audience and the faculty involved. The pertinent issues regarding challenges of applying Activity as a methodological option and role of a teacher were raised and critically discussed.

The students who presented their papers in this session are as follows:
